The tavern is located directly on the northwest corner of Church Lane and Railroad Avenue. It is set close to the street, and the main entrance door faces north on Church Lane yet at the same time the entrance portico is at the west side of the building. It is a two story building with a gable-end roof. The structure is mostly covered with white asbestos shingle.

The west facade of the tavern faces the railroad and consists of two parts, the main tavern and the adjoining dwelling which connects directly with 9937 Railroad Avenue. The main section of the tavern is two bays wide. The first story is covered with red board and batten siding. A projecting shed roof covers the enclosed entrance porch. Behind the entrance, in the southwest corner of the building, there is a small six light window. The second story which is covered with white asbestos shingle has two, six over six double hung sash windows. The connecting building also has two stories and is covered with asbestos shingle. There are two openings on the first floor, the entrance door and a small window. Steps lead up to the small landing in front of the plain wooden door. A two over two double hung sash window is found in the southwest corner of the building. The second story has four openings. In the center of the facade there are two, six over six double hung sash windows. In the northwest corner, over the door, there are two knee windows with three lights.

The north facade of McDermott's faces Church Lane. The red board and batten siding continues around on the first story of this side. The first section projects out slightly from the main section of the building and is covered by a hip roof. There is a small entrance door at the northeast corner. On the second story there is a six over six double hung sash window.

The back or east facade of the tavern has two small vents at the second story. It continues the pattern of white shingles on the second story and the board and batten siding on the first level. It is possible that the siding covers white stucco.

SPECIFIC DATESBUILDER/ARCHITECT*STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The tavern is an integral part of the Texas community as a local gathering place. Although it has not always been called McDermott's, it has been the site for other taverns. The idea of the local tavern was present in Ireland and still exists today in an Irish settled community.

Notes

The 1852 map indicates a building on the corner of Church Lane and Railroad Avenue. The name given is Cockey and it indicates there was a tavern there. The 1877 Hopkins map also shows a structure on the corner.

The plat of Griscom vs. Griscom shows that there used to be a road running behind the tavern property. The road ran south off of Church Lane.

The size of the lot is about 47'x 108'x 95'x 100'
